Frank E. Langley, Publisher.
 Entered at the Postoffice at Barre as Second Class Matter.

MONDAY, APRIL 2, 1906.

The average daily circulation of the Barre Daily Times for the week ending Saturday was copies, the largest paid circulation of any daily paper in this section.

4,110

The real Spring seems to have arrived several days late.

The great American metropolis continues to furnish about an average of a murder a day.

The Boston coal dealer who raised the price of coal to a fancy figure and who said he was doing it to benefit the poor man was probably perpetrating an April fool joke.

AN EVER-LENGTHENING WORK.

On December 10, 1904, Governor Bell approved of an act of the Vermont legislature providing for an investigation of the state asylum, the state prison, the house of correction and the industrial school. Within a reasonable short time, Gov. Bell named a commission of three men to make the investigation according to the desire of the legislature. The commission got to work reasonably soon, and they've been at it ever since, not continuously, to be sure, but sporadically. Flitting here and there, sitting now for a day and again adjourning, the commission has been doing its work by piecemeal. Granted that the fitting was necessary to get at the bottom of affairs, why is it that the commission has drawn out its labors over a period of fourteen months and with the end not yet in sight? We suppose that one reason is that our hard-worked attorney general cannot distribute himself in several places at the same time; in other words, he cannot conduct criminal prosecutions in murder cases and also conduct the investigation of several state institutions. Therefore, the one has to give way to the other. That probably does account for some of the delay, but it hardly seems possible that it covers the whole delay. As it now appears, the investigation will go on for some time more, as Supt. Morgan of the state house of correction is asking for an opportunity to give "his side" of the affairs at Rutland. When will the end be?

SEN. DILLINGHAM'S IMMIGRATION BILL.

The changes in the immigration laws as proposed by the bill of Senator Dillingham of Vermont in the bill presented to Congress last week are numerous, being as follows: The head tax on incoming aliens is increased from $2 to $5, and steamships are subject to fines of $100 for bringing to the United States any person prevented from entering by reason of afflictions of mind or body. The present law provides for such fines only in the case of aliens afflicted with loathsome or contagious diseases. The bill adds to the classes of aliens now excluded by law all imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, persons who are mentally or physically defective, such defect being of a nature which may affect the immigrant's ability to earn a living; children under seventeen years, unless accompanied by parents and strengthen the provisions excluding polygamists, criminals and prostitutes. The head tax is imposed on aliens in transit except in certain cases and is abolished in the case of foreign officials coming to the United States overland. The bill further provides that steamship companies be required to furnish lists of all outgoing aliens before departure from the United States. To aid in promoting the distribution of admitted aliens among the states and territories desiring settlers the bill establishes a division of information in the bureau of immigration. Information concerning states and territories will be collected and distributed among admitted aliens, and states and territories may maintain representatives at the various immigrant stations for the purpose of inducing aliens to settle there.

It will be noted that the restrictions are much closer than at present.

THE NEXT ATTRACTION.

Barre Theatre Patrons to See "The Duke of Killicrankie" This Week.

"The Duke of Killicrankie" which Archie L. Shepard presents at the Barre opera house next Friday evening is by Captain Robert Marshall, author of "His Excellency the Governor" and "Second in Command", and was about the only play that enlivened the gloom of the past two seasons in London. The same might be said in connection with its phenomenal run at the Empire Theatre in New York last season. As a rule this fashionable playhouse was crowded nightly with its characteristic audience, which relished the fantastic absurdity of the story, above all the exquisitely delicate finish in its medieval abduction in which a modern, nay, an ultra modern Scotch Duke makes away with his unwilling lady-love, with all the decision, if none of the bravery of young Lochinvar allures her to a mediaeval mountain fastness and shuts her up with him (chaperoned) until she is made to love him. Captain Marshall has made his story most creditable. His Duke is a clever lordling addicted to fads and spoiled by always having his whims more than gratified. Lady Henrietta scorns his suit for the excellent reason that he is a spoiled youngster, berating him with the fact that all his life girls have been eager to throw themselves at his head. She taunts him about his fads and the taunts prove her undoing. He determines to carry one through to the end, the fact of marrying her. He induces a friend to send a lying telegram summoning her to the sick bed of an aunt in the highlands, and then bribes a railway guard to put her into a carriage that takes her, not to the aunt but to the castle of Killicrankie on the top of a mountain, where he shuts her behind stone and iron. His friend is in love with a rich widow, who has also scorned his suit and it is a part of the unethical compact that she is to be the chaperone.

To complicate matters the widow and Lady Henrietta are at sword points. It is not a merry party that gathers at supper in the highlands. The cattishness of woman to woman has been a favorite material for comedy since females have played themselves on the stage, but not even Moliere and Sheridan have extracted more mirth from such encounters than Captain Marshall gets out of his second act. Repartee follows repartee and keeps the audience in gurgles of exquisite laughter. Humane and artistically speaking the crisis of the play lays in the moments in which the two beleaguered women fall beneath the charms of their captors. Captain Marshall is a true son of Gilbert in his wit and his sense of the politely absurd. The scene in which the women try to induce the craven Henry Pitt-Welby to hurl himself out of the castle and into the top of a tall pine far below the walls and the scrupulous reason with which he argues the point is in the best manner of the actor of "En-gaged." ## A GOOD TEAM

Work and thrift make a combination hard to beat. Many people know the meaning of work who have not learned the meaning of thrift. The man who works and who has acquired the habit of thrift is the man who is getting ahead. The right thing to do is to save a part of your wages every pay day, deposit the amount in the Granite Savings Bank and Trust Company and watch the account grow in goodly proportions. A dollar will open an account, but if you can make it five you will get ahead that much faster.
